The ripple effects of a good deed

By Rabbi Michael Laitner

'And God said to Moses: do not fear him (Og, the king of Bashan)...' (Bemidbar 21,34)

At the end of our Sidra, with Bnei Yisrael on the eastern side of the River Jordan, Moshe is faced with a military challenge from Og, king of Bashan which was one of the neighbouring territories. Bnei Yisrael had, due to the help of God, enjoyed stunning success when taking on their enemies previously.

Why then does Moses now feel afraid of Og?

Rashi on our verse, quoting the Midrash (Tanchuma 25), explains that Moses was worried that Og, who was a powerful but aged warrior, still enjoyed some merit from his encounters with Abraham (based on Bereishit chapter 14).

The Midrash's message is striking, even if not necessarily to be taken literally. Helping people and being positive have powerful spiritual resonance. Og is presented as having achieved this.

Yet it is still surprising that this concerns Moshe. Bnei Yisrael had merited miraculous help from God when attacked by the enemies, in part due to their religious devotion as well as because of God's commitment to the people. Why might Moses be worried that Og, who now wished to attack Bnei Yisrael, might be more worthy of protection?

Perhaps an answer lies in what our Sidra presents prior to this episode. The people complained several times (see 20: 1-3), such as after the death of Miriam and the subsequent cessation of the miraculous well which had existed in her merit (see Talmud Ta'anit 9a and Rashi on 20:2). At that point, they do not give thanks for the previous provision of water.

Following on from the complaints about water, the next stage of dissatisfaction was yet another grumble against Moshe for bringing them out of Egypt nearly 40 years earlier! The underlying cause of such action against Moshe would seem really to be a complaint against God (see Sanhedrin 110a).

Rather than expressing gratitude for what they had received, the people just complained. Perhaps they found it hard to acknowledge the physical good that they had received, even if it was not everything they wanted. Expressing gratitude, particularly in tough situations, is sometimes very difficult, but must be our aspiration and can help us to develop spiritually.

Conversely, lack of gratitude can be a serious spiritual problem, perhaps serious enough that Moshe was worried that the people might have lost spiritual standing due to such a lack. This could have placed them in danger when facing somebody presented in a positive light as Og is in that Midrash. This may be why Moshe is afraid.

Yet our verse shows a comforting ending, for evidently Bnei Yisrael had responded positively enough after the final set of complaints mentioned in the Sidra. Perhaps this was through showing acknowledgment of the good they had received, by singing the song of the well (20: 17-20). God therefore reassured Moshe that he need not worry, that apparently Bnei Yisrael had recovered spiritual merit and need not fear Og, from whom they subsequently emerge unscathed.

Holding Leaders to Account

A change of leadership amidst angry words in Israel... Intemperate texts, namecalling and recriminations from former SPADS... Investigations highlighting systemic failures, corruption and cover-up in state institutions.

Can leaders lead and keep faith with God and the People?

“Moses raised his hand and struck the rock with his staff twice, when an abundance of water gushed forth, and the congregation and their livestock drank.” (Numbers 20:11)

The episode where Moses strikes the rock in place of speaking to it is one of the harshest in the whole Torah. It is also one of the most paradoxical. Clearly, Moses should have followed God’s instruction to the letter. Given that he did not and was eventually punished so severely being denied entry to the Promised Land, we may ask how come the miracle was successful and water flowed from the rock?

Despite His anger, God didn’t embarrass Moses and didn’t let him down. He didn’t hold Moses up to ridicule, nor let him become a public laughingstock. God didn’t suspend the miracle until Moses put his rod down and apologised. Moses’ own contrition is not even mentioned at this point.

Moses is a lesson that prestige, prominence and track record do not mean that one has risen above normal religious obligations. Leadership is an onerous responsibility. For our leaders in public life, whether our leaders are seen as enjoying the limelight or public servants who make sacrifices, they remain accountable.

From the fact that God made the miracle happen despite Moses’ disobedience, there is a second significant lesson.

People in every arena make mistakes. Sometimes passions get the better of them. However, not every mistake by a leader is one which must result in immediate uproar, scandal or humiliation. Moses’ impropriety here was between him and God, which God would resolve that himself and in His own time. Disciplining Moses was not a job for every grumbling Israelite. It was important to God that the good and vital work that Moses was doing, alongside the recognition of all the good that he had already done was not sacrificed in the face of a single lapse.

We are quick to criticise and judge. It’s not wrong. We should not acquiesce in the face of wrongdoing or injustice. Nonetheless, we should offer commentary which is appropriate and constructive. We should appreciate the good even when criticising the bad.
