SHABBAT AFTERNOON

12:05pm EARLY MINCHA in the Main Synagogue

4:00pm MINCHA AND SHIUR by Rabbi Laitner titled
'Peshuto Shel Mikra in Parashat Vayetze: Yaakov as a Diaspora Jew'

5:04pm MA'ARIV & TERMINATION OF SHABBAT
in the Main Synagogue

The roots of Maariv by Rabbi Michael Laitner

‘And he (Yaakov) encountered the ‘Place’ (‘BaMakom’, a name of God), and stayed there, for the sun had set...’ (Bereishit 28,11).

Maariv is one of the most familiar ways of ushering in a new Jewish day at evening or night time. One of its roots is in the Torah’s description of Yaakov’s esoteric encounter with God, referenced in the verse above, as he flees from the mortal wrath of his brother Esau. Yaakov heads to the sanctuary of his uncle Laban, in the land of Charan (possibly corresponding to eastern parts of modern day Turkey).

The Talmud (Berachot 26b) identifies the verb, ‘encountered’ as connoting prayer. When Yaakov stopped for the night, “on the run”, he encountered God through prayer and is thus seen as the originator of the Ma’ariv (evening) prayer, following in the footsteps of his father Yitzchak and grandfather Avraham who originated the Mincha (afternoon) and Shacharit (morning) prayers respectively, according to the teaching of the Talmudic sage Rabbi Yossi ben Rabbi Chanina (ibid).

Why is the name ‘Makom’, meaning ‘place’, used to refer to God rather than a more commonly used name? Several of the classic Biblical commentators note that the Talmud (Chulin 91b) explains that Yaakov knew that his ancestors had also prayed in the same place as he now found himself. The Talmud also implies that this spot was the Temple Mount. This would fit with Yaakov’s naming of the place as Beit El, the house of God (rather than being the same place as the contemporary town named Beit El).

On that basis Rabbi Moshe Feinstein (1895-1986), notes that the association with this place was particularly significant for Yaakov, who was in flight from his home to an openly uncertain future. Yaakov must have been wondering how to survive as a Jew in such an indeterminate exile.

Rabbi Feinstein explains that Yaakov could still encounter God despite such being “on the run” from home. The power of prayer as an anchor to Yaakov’s family traditions and as a link to God provided spiritual nourishment to sustain him, even in such a trying situation. Yaakov garnered the strength to succeed as a Jew despite his circumstances and exile. One of the sources of his strength was his prayer. This power of prayer has undoubtedly played a similar role for Yaakov’s descendants throughout Jewish history.

We are blessed, thank God, to live in far less trying circumstances yet can still benefit from the anchor that Maariv and our other prayers provide for us every day, especially when these link us to what it means to be a Jew, as they seemed to do for Yaakov.

VAYETZEI STATISTICS

Vayetze is remarkable as the entire Sidra is one very long parsha (paragraph).

Mitzvot:	None of the 613 mitzvot

Anomalous Animalia

A thoughtful congregant inquired about the décor on two of our Torah crowns, which are topped with eagles. There are copious Torah instructions against images and effigies. The injunction in Shemot 20,4 ostensibly prohibits any representation or model of celestial, terrestrial or maritime bodies. לֹא תַעֲשֶׂה לָךְ פֶּסֶל וְכָל תְּמוּנָה אֲשֶׁר בַּשָּׁמַיִם מִמַּעַל וְאֲשֶׁר בָּאָרֶץ מִתַּחַת וְאֲשֶׁר בַּמַּיִם מִתַּחַת לָאָרֶץ.

Lions above the Aron Kodesh and Eagles atop the Sifrei Torah within it seem like flagrant violations of these halachot.

Historic synagogues such as the Beit Alfa near Bet She'an include mosaic floors with images of the Zodiac. The Talmud and Rambam even reference the significance of star signs – though certainly reject tabloid horoscopes as nonsense. The ceilings of some classic cathedral shuls are decorated with stars. Stars, planets, constellations and angels are particularly problematic as the possuk לֹא תַעֲשֶׂן אֹתִי אֱלֹהִי כִסֹּף וְאֱלֹהֵי זָהָב לֹא תַעֲשׂוּ לָכֶם (Shemot 20,20) is understood as expressly prohibiting these. The Talmud (Rosh Hashana 24a) is at pains to explain how Rabban Gamliel was able to have a tablet depicting phases of the moon in order to interrogate witnesses coming to him to report their Rosh Chodesh sightings. The Talmud posits that an exception might be made for a person of his stature and integrity, for learning or teaching.

Our own synagogue has two- and three-dimensional artworks (stained glass windows and the copper decorations around the Aron Kodesh in the Deal Halls) depicting the emblems of the Tribes of Israel, including the lion of Judah, the deer of Naftali, the donkey of Issachar, the snake of Dan and the wolf of Binyamin. According to the midrashim, these appeared on the banners of the tribes in their encampment in the Midbar.

These images seem to have been accepted as inspirations of traits, as we read in Pirkei Avot 5:20 יְהוּדָה בֶּן תִּימָא אוֹמֵר, וְגִבּוֹר כְּאֵרִי, לַעֲשׂוֹת רְצוֹן אֲבִיךָ הוּא עַד בְּנִמְר, וְקַל כְּנֶשֶׁר, וְרַץ כְּצִבִּי, וְגִבּוֹר כְּאֵרִי, לַעֲשׂוֹת רְצוֹן אֲבִיךָ שְׂבִשְׁמִים.

Yehudah ben Teimah says: Be brazen like the leopard, light like the eagle, swift like the deer, and mighty like the lion to do the Will of your Father Who is in Heaven.

Our Poskim have warned against the negative connotations of animals, with particular prohibitions on the sighting or depicting of non-kosher species. In the Shulchan Aruch in Hilchot Niddah, we find instructions that a woman emerging purified from the mikveh should be careful that the first thing she sees is not a dog or rodent (YD198:48 Rama et al). The Rokeach (Rabbi Elazar of Worms, d1238) writes that children heading out to learn Torah on erev Shavuot, would be guided through the streets with their heads covered and blindfold so that they wouldn't glimpse an impure dog before beholding the beauty of their first holy letters.

More recently, the late Lubavitcher Rebbe strongly advocated that non-kosher animals should not appear in picture books and that children should not have teddy bears. Donald Duck and Bambi, yes. Mickey Mouse and Sonic the Hedgehog, no.

“Visual images have great impact on man's mind: What one sees can leave lasting impressions for good or bad. Viewing sacred objects or images has positive benefits; pictures of impure animals harm the mind and soul.

Children are particularly susceptible, for that which registers upon the mind when young forms an indelible impression. In the words of King Shlomo: “Train a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it.” Impressions etched in a child's tender mind have potent effects even when older.” From Sichah 20 MarCheshvan 5744

Does what we see distract /detract from the Glory of Hashem in Heaven or does it inspire us to emulate the creatures of creation in the service of our Creator?

I do not see us melting down the synagogue silver anytime soon!

This Shabbat Hannah Aaron will be marking her Bat Mitzvah. She is a budding artist, who has painted a series of pictures inspired by the Aliyot of the Parasha.

Wishing everyone Shabbat Shalom.

Rabbi Jeremy Lawrence
