Understanding Everyone – Leora and Harry Salter

In this week's Parasha, we are told about the end of days for Jacob. The Parasha's name, Vayechi, means 'And he lives,' even though the Sedra is about the death of Jacob. Even though we like to assess our lives throughout our years, through mid-years assessments, the best time to fully look back is at the end. Only at the end of one's life can they see what kind of a life they led. Jacob uses his end of days to bless the two sons of Joseph and later, the twelve tribes.

We are told that: 'And he blessed them on that day, saying "With you, Israel will bless saying, May G-d make you like Ephraim and Manasseh.'" (Genesis 48:20). This text is of course the famous blessing given to boys on a Friday night, a common phrase for Jews throughout the generations. This universal blessing is given to all Jewish generations as a blessing to be like Ephraim and Manasseh. However, this is a unique occurrence, and it is unusual for one blessing to fit all.

As we are told in this week's Parasha, Jacob blesses each one of the twelve tribes with a different blessing. Each blessing is fundamentally different and is tailor-made to the character traits and emotional make-up of each tribe. Jacob blesses one son with power and dominion, another with agricultural wealth, one is compared to a lion, one to a wolf and another to a serpent. Jacob knows his children and knows how diverse and heterogeneous his family is. He knows how to bless them with the particular resources that they will need as they march forward with varying talents and dispositions into their historical roles. The Torah says: 'All these were the tribes of Israel, twelve in number, and this is what their father said to them as he bade them farewell, addressing to each a blessing appropriate to him.' (Genesis 49:28). To each a different blessing, to each his own parting words.

The Talmud teaches us that 'no two faces are alike, so too no two personalities are alike.' We are all physically, psychologically, intellectually, spiritually different in every other way, and this message is vitally important for education and how we treat everyone.

Rav Abraham Issac Kook teaches that the very purpose of education is to help each person discover his or her own individuality, to learn what he or she can do best. Self-discovery, for Rav Kook, is the essence of the educational endeavour. Each individual offers something else to the changing and complicated world.

As educators, parents, grandparents, great-grandparents and adults, we have a responsibility to help the individuals, to understand each owns complexities. Like Jacob's children, we all are uniquely blessed. Appreciating our uniqueness, as that of every one of our fellows, is an essential component of Jewish spirituality.

A Learning Bee

I look forward to seeing many of you at the United Synagogue's Siyum HaShas (Shas is the Hebrew acronym for the six orders of Mishna / Talmud) celebration of the completion of the 13th and beginning of the 14th Daf Yomi Cycle on Motzaei Shabbat. We are only 6 Daf into the 2,711 folio marathon, and I am hoping to get further this time than last. My congratulations to the men and women whose diligence and assiduity saw them complete it. I highly recommend the morning shiur given at Kinloss by Moishe Sampson. There is a remarkable array of online materials, downloadable shiurim and accessible Gemarras which translate the Aramaic and track the line of debate. See <https://alldaf.org/>, www.yutorah.org and www.sefaria.org (who have the new Koren Steinsaltz commentary and translation.)

Of course, there is a world of difference between the completion of the Talmud at a daf a day and true scholarship attained by those who are diligent or fortunate enough to pore over each sugya (section of debate) and major commentary. The accusation that scholarship was being trivialised and popularised by Daf Yomi was levelled at R' Meir Shapiro (1887-1933), who established it in August 1923 at the first world congress of Agudat Yisrael in Vienna. It began on Rosh Hashana of that year.

When Rambam published his Mishneh Torah 1170-80, making psak accessible and codifying halacha systematically rather than following the meandering themes of the Talmud, he also faced disparagement that he was dumbing down learning. Whereas the Rabbis of yesteryear were confronted by congregants hoping for a psak that they had read in the text of Rambam, the Kitzur Shulchan Aruch (1864), the Aruch HaShulchan (1893) or Mishneh Brura (1903), today's sheilot are pre-framed with recourse to Rav Google!

The suggestion that learning was being diminished through opening it up is found within the Talmud itself. When R' Gamliel was forced to step aside as head of the Sanhedrin, his successor R' Elazar ben Azariya added 400 (or 700) new pews to the Yeshiva (Brachot 28a) so that everyone who wanted to learn could attend. R' Gamliel had only admitted those who had the purest motives and lifestyle. The Gemarra explores his own consideration – had he denied prospective students the opportunity to learn or had he kept the study halls free from empty idlers?

Making Torah accessible lies at the heart of the early discussions of the halachot of copyright. A sixteenth century publisher of the Mishneh Torah sought to protect his typeset and pagination against a non-Jewish publisher who endeavoured to undercut him using the raw text. Protection of new works was justified by the Chatam Sofer (d1839) who argued that if we did not restrict competition, “which fool would undertake the publication” of Judaica and risk heavy financial loss? Publication of Jewish works would cease, and Torah study would be weakened. (To that end, I do encourage you to continue to buy sefarim and subscribe to journals, and not just to rely on what is freely available!)

The Hebrew word for tractate is Masechet, which means a weaving. Arguments, teachings and concepts are interwoven, from the depth and breadth of rabbinic thought. One of the beauties of the thematic (rather than Rambam's systematic) approach is that one jumps from one topic and discipline to another, making us appreciate a holistic (if sometimes chaotic) Torah-worldview.

As part of the US Siyum, the Rabbinate will also be completing various additional bodies of learning. In studying transfer of ownership and usufruct in Mishnah Bava Batra (5:4), I was inspired by the teaching that if one buys rights to a beehive, one can take three swarms of bees, but then has to alternate (letting every other swarm fly away). This was to ensure that hive continued to be self-sustaining, and to ensure that there was time for replenishment by strong bees not just the inferior ones.

Underpinning our rights to enjoy what we can take from our world and our property is a strong environmental message about resource management and conservation.

Torah learning is for us all – that is why we describe it as Morasha Kehilat Yaakov (Devarim 11:4), belonging to the whole people as something we should live and nurture. While all its complexities and abstractions cannot be mastered by everyone, every marathon begins with a step – and not everyone needs to run a marathon. Even a walk in the park is worthwhile and healthy exercise. Not everyone who is celebrating Daf Yomi has completed Shas. We are celebrating being a community which shares in appreciation of great learning.

Our new brochure highlights our many activities in and around Kinloss – do join in, participate and be a part of something great.

Shabbat Shalom

Searching

What are we to make of the human being's endless searching - 63,000 searches per second on Google alone per day?

How a 'story from Chelm' captures the essence of the human being's constant need to search and how the roadmap to the destination is to be found in the first verse of the Shema.

Rabbi Shmuel Zajac, a Chabad Chassid, grew up in Brazil, studied in the UK and Australia, receiving Semicha and qualifying as a Shochet in the US. Married to Rochel, together they are still raising their seven children B"H, and served disparate Jewish communities from Hong Kong to New Zealand and others in between. Rabbi Zajac's interests include people, property, equity markets and every four years - the world cup.
