Pinchas' and the Covenant of Peace

This week's Parsha is Parshat Pinchas, named after Aaron's grandson, the son of Elazar, who succeeded Aaron as high priest. Pinchas' story, itself, happened right at the very end of last week's Parsha.

A plague had broken out because of acts of immorality, idolatry and promiscuity in the Israelite camp. Moshe had given orders to the judges that offenders should be dealt with severely. We are told that an Israelite man took a Midianite woman, to the entrance of the tent of assembly and they were conducting themselves indecently in full public view. The commentaries agree that the couple were not merely a pair of indiscreet lovers but were staging their own provocative demonstration and had chosen the Tent of Assembly in order to be confrontational.

They were & it worked! Pinchas picked up his spear and ran the two of them through.

Last week's Parsha ended by telling us that after Pinchas' intervention the plague ended having taken 24,000 casualties.

If last week's Parsha left you wondering at the merits of Pinchas' extra-judicial action, you are not alone. Even the Jerusalem Talmud has the Jewish leadership divided – is this how we resolve matters in Jewish law? It records that the sages were minded to excommunicate Pinchas for what he had done. Penalty & retribution are not the domain of the individual – they belong to the Beth Din

It is with these concerns in mind that our Parsha this week opens with Hashem praising Pinchas' intervention to Moshe. He praises Pinchas' zeal on his behalf. Not only that, Hashem gives Pinchas a unique blessing – his Covenant of Peace.

It appears to be an unequivocal endorsement. Hashem awards Pinchas and the generations that will follow him an eternal priesthood, proclaiming that Pinchas upheld God's jealousy and he atoned for the children of Israel.

What do we make of Hashem's fulsome praise? Is this a charter for bigotry and fundamentalism, ranting and lynch mobs? Doesn't it fly in the face of the judicial traditions we hold dear?

In fact, our commentaries read into the blessing of Pinchas a strong caveat against imitation. The text, in praising Pinchas, disassociates him from notions of uncontrolled rage founded upon his own passions. When Hashem calls him the son of Elazar, the son of Aaron – He reminds us of his grandfather, Aaron, whose motif was the Rodef Shalom, the pursuer of peace.

Moreover, Hashem speaks clearly of Pinchas acting in Hashem's own name and on Hashem's own behalf.

We are given to understand from this that God's endorsement of Pinchas is to be taken as a warning to others. No one else should take the law into their own hands like Pinchas, unless they are confident that Hashem, Himself, would attest that their heart is totally pure. Justice belongs in a Beth Din.

If you look carefully at a Torah scroll, you will see that in the word Shalom in the phrase Briti Shalom, which means "my covenant of peace", the letter vav is written with a break in it. Normally every letter of a Torah scroll must be perfectly formed otherwise the scroll is defective and must be put away. Here, uniquely, the letter is written with a flaw.

What is the message of this split letter vav? I think that it is this - Even when charged with the right motivation, even when we are zealous and show our outrage for the right reasons, even if G-d would back us to the hilt... anger destroys and divides.

We say of the Torah, all its paths are peace.

When we demonstrate on a point of principle – as sometimes we must – it should always be with thought and without anger. We must ask, do our actions bring God and peace into the picture? – If God is lost and peace is shattered we should pursue other avenues.

Shabbat Shalom

The Calligraphic Quirks of Sifrei Torah

Parashat Pinchas is noteworthy in the Sefer Torah for the split letter vav, in the word Shalom (Bemidbar 25:12), as Hashem grants the zealous Cohen His Covenant of Peace. Described as a “visual midrash”, peace entails drawing together two separated parties so that it becomes one whole. This “vav ketiya” is an ancient minhag, recorded by the 13th century Rabbi Yom Tov ben Avraham Ishbili (Ritva). While widespread, it is not universal and is not found in many Yemenite Sifrei Torah. Normally any defective letter would invalidate a whole scroll.

There are many other non-conventional letters found in a Sefer Torah and sofer-written klafim (parchments) of Megillot or Nach.

The Torah begins with a very large letter Bet (Bereshit 1:1), literally augmenting discussion on why the second, rather than first letter of the Alef Bet initials the Torah.

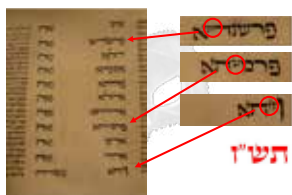

In Parashat Vaetchanan, which we read in a few weeks, the first line of the Shema has a large Ayin at the end of Shema and a large Daled at the end of Echad (Devarim 6:4). The two letters spell the word עד Eid meaning witness. Even as we recite the tenet of faith that Hashem is one, we are witnesses to it.

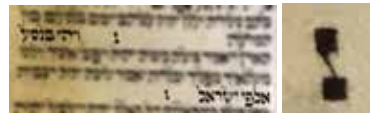

Otiot Rabbati are the large letters. These are joined by Otiot Zeira, small letters, such as the Alef at the end of the word Vayikra (Vayikra 1:1). Emphasising the Yakar (endearment) and diminishing the primary Alef, Hashem, the superlative Unity models that in a relationship the Big One of self should be put after the relationship as a whole.

Through various traditions, the entire Alef Bet can be found in large and in small letters through Tanach.

A particularly famous example of small letters is found in the listing of the 10 sons of Haman (Esther 9) where a small Tav, Shin and Zayin appear in the listing of hanged arch villains. Only recently was it observed that in the Hebrew calendar year תש"ז corresponding to 1946, the ten leading Nazis were hanged at Nuremberg, with Hitler's Julius Streicher recorded as describing the verdict as a “Purimfest for the Jews”. For hundreds of years that tradition hung around lacking explanation.

We recently read in Parashat Behaalotecha (Bemidbar 10:35,36) the inverted Nuns (Nun Hafucha) bracketing the description of the Ark being moved in the wilderness. This leads commentators to explain that there is a “Book within a Book”.

Some letters are highlighted with dots above them (not the Tegin or “crowns”, which are referenced in the Aggadeta about Moshe and R' Akiva in the Talmud Menachot 29b).

These Nekudot Ezra (known by scholars of manuscripts as puncta extrordinaria) are explained as adding emphasis or ambiguity. "If Elijah comes and says: 'Why are all these letters dotted? This is what Ezra said: 'If Elijah comes and says, "Why did you write them?" I will say to him, "I have dotted them"; but if he tells me, "You have written well", I will remove the dots from them.'" (Avot deRabbi Natan). Did Esav kiss Yaakov or bite him on the neck (Bereshit 33:4)?

In Parashat Nitzavim, we are told that the hidden things belong to Hashem, but to us and our children are the revealed. We and our children (and sometimes the following Ayin) are dotted.

One of the unusual forms, referenced in antiquity but is not found in the preponderance of modern scrolls is a Kuf Devuka, where the two normally separated parts of a Kuf are joined at the top (Shemot 32:25 and Bemidbar 7:2).

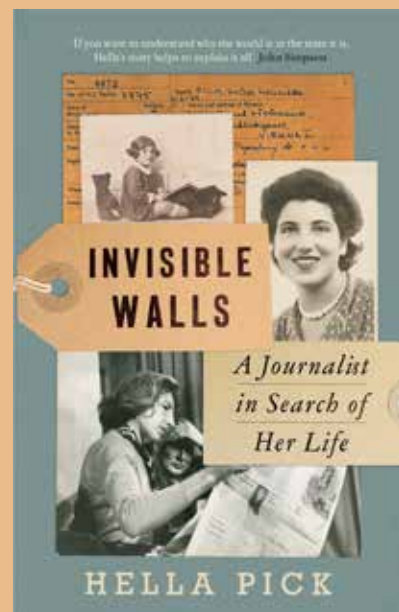

My Sofrus Teacher, R' Natan Segal explained that there were many differences in traditions. Whereas a scribe needs to learn just the one that he is writing, a Baal Megia (who checks Sifrei Torah, Mezzuzot and Tefillin) needs to be familiar with all the nuances before he can invalidate a letter.

A valuable lesson he tried to impart; Everyone, even with a modicum of knowledge, should feel free to ask questions. Experts make determinations of kosher or possul. Bridging gaps, making the normally unacceptable kosher, harmonising conflict is the hallmark of a true scholar, who is familiar with all traditions, angles and views.

Shabbat Shalom
