Mah Tovv – the words we say when entering Shul

“Mah tovu ohalecha Yaakov, mishkenotecha Yisrael”.

‘How good are your tents Jacob, your dwellings Israel’ (Bemidbar 24,5).

This verse, familiar from the Siddur as we enter shul (green Siddur, page 4), is taken from the attempted curses of the non-Jewish prophet Bilam.

Balak, the king of Moab (a territory today in Jordan) after whom today’s Sidra is named, was scared of the Jewish people and hired Bilam to curse them. At that time, the Jewish people were on the eastern side of the River Jordan, close to the end of their 40 year stay in the desert and soon to enter Israel.

Despite the famous miracle of Bilam’s talking donkey and God’s changing Bilam’s evil intent into words of praise, neither Bilam nor Balak gave up on their original plan.

How can we read their denial to abandon their plans into the blessings Bilam was inspired to give? The 16th century Gur Aryeh commentary of Rabbi Yehuda Loew, of Prague, explains that ‘tents’ and ‘dwellings’ are in fact metaphors for synagogues and study halls. Bilam actually meant to curse the Jews by wishing that there would be neither synagogues nor study halls in the Jewish future. This would have deprived us of two of our spiritual powerhouses.

The synagogue is a place where we can meet as Jews and express ourselves before God, both as individuals and as a community. Rabbi Loew quotes the Talmud (Berachot 6a) which states that when Jews pray together, the Divine Presence rests amongst them. The study hall is the intellectual engine room of the Jewish people, where we can gain an appreciation and understanding of thousands of years of Judaism.

Another powerhouse is the home. Rashi alludes to this, when he interprets the goodness of the tents as being due to their modest design which allowed for each family’s privacy. Bilam really did wish to divide us from our heritage, but God changed Bilam’s words, so that blessings came forth instead.

Given all of this, I hope we can better appreciate why the rabbis of the Talmudic era chose this verse as appropriate for entrance into the synagogue, as an effective reminder of the importance of communal endeavour and prayer as well as how to take their lessons into the home and elsewhere. May we be successful in doing this and thereby merit a greater closeness to God.

Shabbat Shalom

UK FUNDING TO UNWRA: FINANCING AID OR SUPPORTING TERROR?

Join the ZF to hear from David Bedein, Director of the Center for Near East Policy Research. A focus of the center's investigations is The United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees (UNWRA) exposing UNRWA's promotion of Antisemitism and incitement to violence in their education system.

David will be speaking about the UK's recent increase in its funding to UNRWA, even though UK DFID officials admit that they know that the Hamas military wing has taken over the UNRWA unions and that UNRWA uses humanitarian funds to create military training in the UNRWA schools.
