The Symbols of the Shevatim Part 1: Reuven

The Twelve Tribes of Israel or the “Shvatim” are often depicted in Synagogue art. The earliest representations will have been on the banners of the tribes as they encamped around the Mishkan (Tabernacle) in the wilderness (Bemidbar 2:2). Each of the tribes was additionally featured with a gemstone on the Choshen (Breastplate) of the High Priest (Shemot 28:21). The symbols of the tribes are predominantly drawn from images in the blessings given by Yaakov to his sons in Bereshit 49. There is even a correlation between some of the tribal symbols and the Zodiac, which is also found in early synagogue mosaics.

The consistent symbol for Reuven is the mandrakes דודאים.

In Bereshit 30:14, Reuven finds mandrakes in the field which he brings to his mother Leah. The story is clearly significant as it interrupts the listing of Yaakov’s children by his wives and concubines. It highlights a tension between Leah and Rachel, with Reuven’s mandrakes a catalyst for the flare-up.

At this point, Leah has already given birth to Reuven, Levi, Shimon and Judah. Bilhah has given birth to Gad and Dan. Naftali was born to Zilpah. Rachel, alone, is barren. Even so, examination of the verses where Leah’s children are names betrays sorrow that despite giving Yaakov children, Leah feels unloved.

Immediately after Reuven presents his mother with the mandrakes, we are told that Rachel asks for some of them, whereupon Leah snaps back. Is it not enough that Rachel has taken her husband? Sforino (d 1550) understands Leah to be saying that though Laban had tricked Yaakov into marrying her, Rachel ought to have been resigned to her loss and not consented to marry Yaakov later. “Moreover,” Leah exclaims, “you want my son’s mandrakes!” To this, Rachel responds that Leah can go to Yaakov’s bed that night, clearly ceding her own turn.

Leah explains the circumstances and transaction to Yaakov, “I have hired you with my son’s mandrakes” (Bereshit 30:16). The episode evokes Yaakov’s own purchase of Esau’s birthright for a bowl of soup. Their son, Yissachar, whose name denotes “hire” was conceived that night.

The mandrakes were clearly prized for their properties as fertility treatment, stimulant or perfume; hence both Rachel and Leah’s desire to have them. Noteworthy, though, is that the Torah keeps referencing them as Reuven’s mandrakes. Why is the association with him so important? The 18th century Moroccan-born Kabbalist, the Or HaChaim (R Chaim Attar d 1743) suggests that we see Reuven’s selflessness and devotion to his mother in this story. He was anxious to make her happy, even at the cost of his own prominence if she went on to raise more siblings. Hence, the mandrakes represent the qualities of loyalty and empathy as well as being a metaphor for intimacy.

In Yaakov’s blessing, he describes Reuven as פזח כמים “impetuous like water.” This is a rebuke for an incident after the mandrakes, where Reuven in some manner interferes in the conjugal relations between Yaakov and Bilhah (Bereshit 35:22). Yaakov explains that this episode cost Reuven his pre-eminence among the brothers. Ultimately Yehuda will inherit Sovereignty. For his impetuosity, Reuven is occasionally depicted as choppy and uncertain waters. This is possibly why Reuven is also associated with Aquarius.

What You Know & Whom You Know

Parshat Shemot begins with a listing of the family who

Relief of Ramses II with Captives of Diverse Nationalities

came down with Yaakov to join Yosef in Egypt. It tells us that after they had all died, a new king arose who did not know Yosef. The new king feared the growing Israelite cohort that filled the land and resolved to take wise preventative action.

Our commentators ask about the emphasis placed on the idea that the new king didn't know Yosef. Why do we need to be told?

Obviously, time has passed. Is the Torah simply teaching that the new Pharaoh hadn't met the hero who had spared his country the years of famine and made the palace rich? Would the Torah include this detail just to highlight that the new ruler didn't know his country's history?

In fact, this might be the case. Egyptian history records many changes in regime – not just changes of king but of entire ruling families and dynasties. The Pharaohs who built the step pyramid at Saqqara and the Sphinx belonged to the 11 dynasties of the Old Kingdom. Tutankhamen belonged to the 18th Dynasty. Ramses II, who was possibly the king at the time of Moses belonged to the 19th dynasty.

Just like other turbulent transitions, it might be a case of “out with the old and in with the new.” A new dynasty committed to securing its own power base and eradicating the families who had prospered under their predecessors. The new king had no relationship with Yosef, and Yosef's children had no loyalty to him.

“Not knowing Yosef” could also be understood on a symbolic level. Yosef's interpretation of the old Pharaoh's dreams taught important lessons about the roles and powers of Hashem and man. Yosef had taught that destiny was established by Hashem. The years of plenty and the years of famine were ordained. Nonetheless, our destiny is shaped by our responses. The collection of food when the harvests were good and the storage of grain for the years ahead highlight the role of humanity. We don't just let Hashem get on with it.

Pharaoh with his idols and magicians pretended that he was a Hashem. Yosef had taught his Pharaoh that men were but men; and despite their pretensions to divinity, kings were but mortal and finite. Hashem, alone, had sovereign, universal and infinite power.

On this level, not knowing Yosef has two consequences. First is Yosef's lesson of the relative roles – and that Pharaoh as a Hashem was self-deception. Secondly, Yosef established in his time that Hashem does reveal Himself through dreams and human prophecy.

The idea that the new king didn't know Yosef isn't just there to teach us that the new Pharaoh didn't know his Egyptian history trivia. If you look at the ongoing Exodus narrative, you'll see that the interactions between Moses and Pharaoh were all about re-teaching the Yosef lessons.

That's why it's important that Moses can say who has sent him; that Hashem commands and that Hashem demands. Pharaoh starts the drama by questioning “who is this Hashem?” But eventually, his magicians unable to replicate the plague of lice identify the finger of Hashem. After the plague of hail Pharaoh concedes that he has sinned before Hashem and, eventually, as his soldiers perish at the Sea, Pharaoh sees his might crushed by the Hand of Hashem.

The Bible is teaching us that there can be a link between the what you know and the who you know. It personalises Yosef's lessons. It identifies the teaching with the man.

When people look at us, do they see our suits, our jewellery, our cars or our job descriptions? Or do we project values of meaning?

Give it a thought, what do I stand for? For what am I known?

Shabbat Shalom

Searching

What are we to make of the human being's endless searching - 63,000 searches per second on Google alone per day?

How a 'story from Chelm' captures the essence of the human being's constant need to search and how the roadmap to the destination is to be found in the first verse of the Shema.

Rabbi Shmuel Zajac, a Chabad Chassid, grew up in Brazil, studied in the UK and Australia, receiving Semicha and qualifying as a Shochet in the US. Married to Rochel, together they are still raising their seven children B"H, and served disparate Jewish communities from Hong Kong to New Zealand and others in between. Rabbi Zajac's interests include people, property, equity markets and every four years - the world cup.
