The significance of ‘these things...’

Michael Laitner

‘And it was (vayehi) after these things, and God (HaElokim) tested Avraham...’
(Bereishit/Genesis 22:1)

This familiar pasuk (verse) opens the Torah’s description of Akeidat Yitzchak, the binding of Isaac. From the perspective of both peshat (the straightforward meaning of the text) and the perspective of derash (what religious message do the commentators or students of the Torah find in the words), there are many questions we could ask about our verse.

For example, what are ‘these things’? Why does the Torah use such unspecific language? Why is the name ‘Elokim’ used and with a direct object? Why is the word ‘nisa’ which we translated as ‘tested’ used here, this being the only time that this form of the verb is used in the whole of the Torah? Why is this story introduced by the word ‘vayehi’ (and it was)?

If you look at the Torah as it is written in a Sefer Torah, you will notice that the both the previous and subsequent paragraphs to our pasuk also begin with the word ‘vayehi’. In a ‘regular’ Chumash, this corresponds to chapter 21 verse 22 and 22:20 respectively. In fact, 22:20 even duplicates the phrase ‘after these things’!

The previous paragraph describes Avraham’s covenant with Avimelech, king of the land of Gerar. The following paragraph describes the growth of the family of Avraham’s brother Nachor. Perhaps therefore, our pasuk should be read as part of a sequence which is linked to the previous and subsequent paragraphs by use of the word ‘vayehi’ Radak (Rabbi David Kimche, 1160-1235), better known as Radak, asks who would believe Avraham, who was alone with Yitzchak, if Avraham told this whole story. Radak suggests that the story of the Akeidat Yitzchak was not for the generation when it occurred, but for future generations who would read about it in the Torah that Moses wrote at God’s instruction. We can suggest that inclusion of this story in the Torah would attest to its veracity. Future generations would learn about Avraham’s love for God, prompting us to think about the seriousness of our obligations as Jews even though this can sometimes be challenging and difficult. Avraham understood the primacy of God despite the possibility of losing Yitzchak and the fact that this might not square with God’s other promises to him, at least from Avraham’s perspective. God would make the promises work. Before the Torah was written, the story of the Akeidat Yitzchak was passed down through Avraham’s descendants. Its inclusion in the Torah made it available to the world as a divinely approved statement of faith in God.

The Long View on Chessed

This week the prayer halls were open in Bushey Cemetery for the first time since the onset of Covid. There was an eerie familiarity returning to funerals and consecrations with their solemn resonance and echo. I could not help but remember that the last time I had been inside one of the halls, it had been full, floor to ceiling with stacks of empty coffins, an ominous acknowledgement of the pandemic. Now, the hall was no longer a storeroom – but each of those empty caskets was now full and lay beneath the fields outside.

This week's Parasha opens with Hashem's "pastoral visit", through the three Melachim, to Avraham who is recuperating from his Brit Mila (aged 99, at the end of last week's reading). As they depart, Hashem, himself, engages Avraham in a challenging conversation.

It opens, וַיִּקְרָא אֱמֶר הַמֶּכֶסֶה אֲנִי מֵאַבְרָהָם אֲשֶׁר אֲנִי עֹשֶׂה (Bereishit 18:17) Hashem asks himself, "shall I hide from Avraham what I am going to do?... Avraham, whom I have selected to do just and right..." Thereafter, Hashem discloses His punitive judgment on Sodom and Gemorrah. Avraham, as we recall, endeavours without success to negotiate the salvation of the cities, if only fifty, then forty five, forty... all the way down to ten righteous people, can be found inside. Alas, there are not.

Of course, we learn from the "test" that Avraham needed to protest the destruction of innocent and plead for the lives of others. Nonetheless, Chazal wrestle with the idea of a test where even the prayers of an Avraham are unsuccessful.

The Talmud (Yevamot 64a) states, "Hashem desires the prayers of the Tzaddikim... they are like a pitchfork. Just as a pitchfork turns produce from one place to another, the prayers of Tzaddikim turn Hashem's attribute of anger to His attribute of mercy."

Rav Nosson Sternhartz of Nemirov (1780–1845) was the disciple of the Rav Nachman of Bratzlav, responsible for the transcription of the Rebbe's teachings. In his work, Likutei Halachot, he explains the destruction of Sodom dialogue from this perspective.

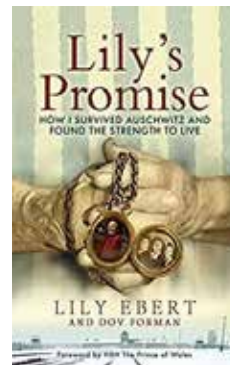

Rav Nosson explains that Hashem welcomed Avraham's prayers and intercession. Though the cities were not spared, and even though Melachim were en route to Sodom and Lot, who lived within, Hashem had not yet determined absolutely that Lot and his family (who were not righteous) should be spared. Lot's wife and daughters only survived through the merit of Avraham's Tefilla. In the context of Bereishit 18-20, these few survivors seem all but insignificant against the destruction and greater loss of life. However, explains Rav Nosson, their survival was a necessary step in the chain of events leading to the birth of Moab, to Ruth, Jesse, the dynasty of Kind David and then ultimate redemption in the Messianic era.

We might not understand the success of our Tefilla in our lifetimes. We might even imagine that we have failed. Nonetheless, Hashem is moved by earnest prayer and the results, though delayed, might be truly momentous.

We should not underestimate the long-term value of any small act of Chessed.

One highlight of my week was the chance to speak to Dov Forman about his collaborative book with his great-grandmother, 96 year old Holocaust Survivor, Lily Ebert. Dov is a remarkable 17 year-old and someone to watch! Over the last couple of years, Dov has shared Lily's story through social media, bringing survivor testimony to new young audiences, and making it especially relatable through his own youthful commentary. Their book, "Lily's Promise" tells of her resolution in Auschwitz to make the world better and kinder if she survived the destruction. Four generations on, Dov's building on that resolve is being followed by hundreds of thousands with an incalculable ripple-effect beyond.

You can watch my conversation with Dov on <https://youtu.be/yup2fCqcgIY>

In the meanwhile, stay safe. I look forward to seeing you in shul and around.

Shabbat Shalom
