What does being 'holy' mean? – Leora and Harry Salter

As we've all been in lockdown, we have all had time to think about our relationships with have with our family and friends. With the majority of people now working from home and spending the majority of our time with the people we live with, relationships are key to a successful isolation.

Parashat Achrei Mot – Kedoshim speak about our relationships we have with others. It mentions how we should respect our parents, partners, business partners, and other commandments we need to adhere by to have successful relationships.

At the start of Parashat Kedoshim, we are commanded 'You shall be holy, for I, the Lord, your G-d, am holy.' What does this commandment to be holy entail?

Let us look at the list of subjects covered in Kedoshim and see if there is one predominant theme telling us how to be holy: honour your parents, keep Shabbat, do not worship idols, leave a corner of the produce of your field for the poor, do not steal, do not tell lies, and do not delay paying salaries. The list continues, 'you shall not curse a deaf person, you shall not place a stumbling block before a blind person,' (Lev. 19:14), do not gossip, judge your fellow man with righteousness and the famous line 'you shall love your neighbour as yourself.' (Lev. 19:18) We're also told about the laws of agriculture, respect for the elderly, the prohibition against tattoos and keeping kosher.

An entire range of subjects, encompassing every aspect of life, comes under the heading of 'holiness.' This is not holiness that require us to aspire to reach mystical heights. When we think of holiness, we think of something that we aspire to, a state of being that can be achieved be only a certain few.

Holiness isn't a distant belief, rather it is found in our relationships with our partners, family, friends, community, business partners, and the people around us. Under the title of 'holiness' we're taught how to live our lives and how we should treat one another. So the predominant theme in this Parasha is actually the same as the central one to the entire Torah – how to live our lives.

This clear message is even more prevalent in the times we find ourselves in. G-d sets out commandments and a set of behaviours that we should do in order to uphold the holy being that we are. The way we act in our relationships with others is key to living a holy life. The Torah presents parameters and limits in having holy relationships with others and we can take this message into our lives today by setting limits, goals, parameters and terms of our relationships with others to be successful and holy.

Fencing for Knowledge

Over the seven weeks of Sefirat HaOmer, some have adopted a “custom” of a daily review of the 48 Kinyanei HaTorah, “modes of acquiring Torah knowledge” that are set out by Rabbi Yehoshua ben Levi in the 6th Chapter of Pirkei Avot. (Mishna 6, p566 in the Green Siddur)

How do we match the forty-eight attributes and the forty-nine days? Different approaches indicate important perspectives on Torah growth. Rav Osher Weiss suggests that the 49th day is a chance to pull each of these virtues together. He emphasizes consolidation and review – we should re-examine what we have learnt and see how different strands of knowledge intersect and interrelate.

Rav Yisrael Lau says that the first day of study is an opportunity to set our eyes on our goal. As we begin our learning, we should consider the nature of the study and its direction. It enables us to focus on the learning, while appreciating its breadth.

This Shabbat will be the 27th day of the Omer and the corresponding attribute is העושה סוג לדבריו, setting a fence around one's Devarim.

What are our Devarim?

One understanding is that the devarim are our words. For our appreciation of the words of Torah and the dicta of Chazal, authentic acquisition of Torah requires us to be disciplined and measured in our own use of language. We must be careful in the information we share that it is accurate, and even when accurate that it will not be misleading, harmful or self-serving.

The ultimate fence of words might be silence. In Pirkei Avot Chapter 3 Rabbi Akiva taught שתיקה, סוג לחכמה, “Silence is the fence for wisdom”. Here, Shtika probably means keeping it zipped not sitting in sensory deprivation. It is good not to interrupt someone else's train of presentation and disrupt their thoughts. However, in a wider sense, Silence enables us to reflect and expand our thoughts.

Taken to an extreme, the Arizal taught that 40 days of silence would “without doubt” ensure Ruach HaKodesh for the practitioner. According to one story, the Ruzhiner Rebbe kept silent for 40 days. When his followers later asked how come he had not attained Ruach HaKodesh he pointed to a horse and noted that the horse had also been silent for 40 days. As with so many guarantees, there may be pre-conditions. It was the Ruzhiner's followers who founded the Tiferet Yisrael shul in Jerusalem, which we know as the “Churva”, now spectacularly restored).

The Maharal understands the “fence” in a completely different way. Citing the Gemarra in Eruvin that the Gallileans were not careful in their speech and the Torah was did not remain with them (53a), he contrasts with the people of Yehuda, who were careful to use their words precisely and created memory aids. Their fence was visualisation that bolstered attention to detail.

Our Devarim are also our possessions, dealings or affairs. Left unregulated, they easily monopolise our lives and marginalise our Torah. We need to fence them in, and we need to know when our actions are diminishing our spiritual growth. We might break to sit down to an episode of a favourite series, then succumb to a binge on the whole box-set. We might start a venture to raise our family and then spend all our time growing our business while our family time and relationships diminish.

Though סיג לדבריו seem to be the essential ingredients of the statement, the העושה element is no less important. The fences in our lives should not be chanced upon, natural borders that come and go when our attention or interests change; nor are they imposed by others. We must make our own fences and take ownership of our growth. As with the initial debate between Rav Lau and Rav Osher Weiss on parameters and consolidation; our learning and growth is enhanced when we look ahead to our goals and take stock in review.

We look forward to you joining in our many programmes for learning and growth in the weeks ahead. As well as daily halacha from Rabbi Laitner after Shacharit and Daf Yomi online, we have a new weekly series of Lunch and Learn.

I shall be in conversation with Abi Gewirtz on talking to our children about “the big bad world” next Wednesday. Approaching Yom Yerushalayim on Bank Holiday Monday evening (3 May), we will have a tour of some of the recent excavations in Jerusalem with the phenomenal multidisciplinary Rabbi Dr Ari Zivotofsky. On Wednesday 5th May I am in conversation with Ambassador Tzipi Hotovely and the following Sunday (9th May) with Hannah Cohen, the widow of Mossad Agent Eli Cohen (“Our Man in Damascus”)

It was lovely to see so many children and their families back in shul last Shabbat. Hoping to see many more this week in good health and safety.

Shabbat Shalom
